Denise Beek & Sekou Campbell
BlackStar Board of Directors, Co-Chairs

For time immemorial, human beings have gathered to learn, laugh, interpret the world, and discover a deeper truth through collective storytelling and listening. In ancient times, a fire served as a source of light and warmth—a central place for community, justice, and education. Today, film serves a similar function. BlackStar has sought to carry this illuminating tradition, one that all people throughout history and all over the world share, with an express purpose to make meaning and reimagine freedom. Film, like fire, requires a special spark and kindling. For the past 13 years, BlackStar has worked to brighten the shine of contemporary storytelling and storytellers of the global majority. It has fanned the flames of creativity, fueled by the courage, ingenuity, thoughtfulness and determination of BIPOC artists, world builders and visionaries.

2024 posed significant threats to BlackStar’s mission, with evergrowing dis- and misinformation, extreme levels of state-sanctioned and outright state violence, and cascades of harmful rhetoric. However, to quote last year’s William and Louise Greaves Seminar keynote speaker, Anisia Uzeyman, a “fragile expression of resistance [conducts] the transfer of power.” For BlackStar, such potency arises, not from militarism or colonialism, but from a story told freely and truthfully, and from meeting the challenge of dominance at every turn with a joy and passion that can’t be extinguished.

As always, BlackStar’s unique approach to people-centered art and activism engenders a unity that binds us in the name of equity, care, and love. Filmmakers, critics, writers, and other industry and non-industry members attended public programming in record numbers, yet again. The organization deepened its relationships with academic and cultural institutions throughout the country, as well as with artists around the world. The organization showcased films and filmmakers that most other places either would not or could not present.

The stories that BlackStar present through films, articles, lectures, screenings, and exhibitions grow the capacity of every member of human society to live fully in their own mind, body, and soul, free from the shibboleths of oppression and colonialism. Storytellers continue to bring us together around light to restore faith and hope. Educators, critics, and advocates provide rigorous analysis and historical context from which we can reflect, dream, and evolve. And audiences, warmed by community and inspiration, light their own torches to warm the lives of even more.

Flames do not feed on air alone. The BlackStar Board is committed to garner more support for the work of the organization, beginning with you. As you take in the accomplishments of 2024, think about how you’ll bask in the brilliance of the 14th annual BlackStar Film Festival from July 31 to August 3, how you will celebrate with us at the third annual gala in the winter of 2025, and what you’ll do with the enlightenment offered by a year’s worth of exhibitions, screenings, and publications. Please also consider the investments required to do this work and be empowered in knowing that BlackStar only shines with the light from your flame.

CEAO Letter

Maori Karmael Holmes
BlackStar Chief Executive & Artistic Officer

Dear Friends,

Back in March of this year, during our Greaves Filmmaker Seminar at Stanford, filmmaker and artist Suneil Sanzgiri spoke about the role of art in times like our current moment: “Movements need art...to remind us not just what we fight against, but what we fight for.” That message echoed in the room again this summer, after the world premiere of Louis Massiah and Monica Henriquez’s TCB: The Toni Cade Bambara School of Organizing on opening night of our 14th film festival. Within that sold out theatre in Philadelphia, while the world seemed to fall apart around us, we were reminded of a long history of resistance to White supremacy and censorship before us.

Toni Cade famously said “the role of the artist is to make the revolution irresistible,” and in 2025

I was proud of BlackStar’s ability to continue to provide platforms for necessary, irresistible art. We did so as our field and communities were under attack, from Israel’s ongoing genocide of Palestinians to the terrifying ICE abductions across the United States. This has been paired with devastating cuts to documentary and public media funding and a roll back on much of the support for Black-led institutions that emerged in the wake of the racial justice uprisings of 2020. BlackStar has not been immune to these shifts, and as a result, this was a year of upheaval for us as well. We’ve managed to navigate them, but not without considerable challenges.

Our brilliant team has worked tirelessly this year as beautifully as ever. In collaboration with our wonderful board of directors, partners, donors, and others who stepped up to support our work, we were still able to hold our largest festival to date, released two of our best-selling issues of Seen, and produced another unforgettable Seminar. We also pulled off a unique performance series in Bartram’s Garden, Joiri Minaya: Venus Flytrap, and completed the third cohort of our Philadelphia Filmmaker Lab.

At the Seminar, Suneil also left us with a question: “What are the conditions under which the conversation you really want to have can occur?”. It feels pertinent as we look ahead at what promises to be simultaneously a more focused and more urgent year of programming. In 2026 we will be celebrating 15 years of BlackStar Film Festival’s spotlighting of “cinema for liberation,” and will move into a new office on Broad Street, right next to our primary festival venues. We will also operate with a smaller team, due to budgetary restructuring, working to ensure that we can maintain the same conditions visionary artists need to speak truth to power. It’s a major moment for everything we’ve been building since 2012, but we’re approaching it as thoughtfully as ever.

Many Lumens,
Maori

The 14th annual BlackStar Film Festival took place July 31-August 3, 2025 and had record-breaking attendance, with more than 23,000 tickets issued. The Festival included both virtual and in-person screenings of 94 genre-defying films, a central stage featuring interviews and panels, a filmmaker brunch and awards ceremony, and opening and closing night parties.

For the third year, BlackStar took over the Avenue of the Arts in downtown Philadelphia, activating three different venues on Broad Street — Perelman Theater at Kimmel Center, Suzanne Roberts Theater, and the Wilma Theater— while continuing to increase accessibility.

The 2025 BlackStar Film Festival was presented with major support from Open Society Foundations. The full list of sponsors can be found on our website.

“This is a festival that feels like home every time I come. I love that experimental films from around the globe are platformed and films with untraditional narrative structures are celebrated. Thank you so much for welcoming my work. It is an affirmation that inspires me to keep creating and to keep trying new things — especially if it scares me.”

“What sets BlackStar apart from other festivals is the way the films, especially the shorts programs, are curated with such care and intention. Each piece doesn’t just stand alone, they speak to one another thematically or emotionally. That thoughtful sequencing creates a richer viewing experience. It lingers with you, giving you time to sit with what you’ve seen before fully unpacking its meaning.”

Philadelphia Filmmaker Lab

2024 – 2025

Philadelphia Filmmaker Lab

The 2024-2025 Lab was presented with support from People’s Media Fund, Mellon Foundation, William Penn Foundation, and the Wyncote Foundation.

BlackStar’s Philadelphia Filmmaker Lab is a year-long fellowship for Black, Brown, and Indigenous filmmakers that provides selected fellows with resources, mentorship, and hands-on training and support to produce a short film. BlackStar acts as an executive producer on each short film created during the Lab and premieres the films at our annual film festival.

In 2024, BlackStar launched the third cohort of Lab Fellowship. In January 2025, fellows participated in a post-production and sound design workshop. They also submitted the rough cuts of their respective films. In February, we had a workshop session where film professionals viewed the rough cuts of their films and offered feedback. In March, we held a workshop on distribution and festival strategy and later that month, the fellows submitted the final cut of their films. In June, we held a virtual workshop for the fellows on how to leverage their short film into professional careers. In August, fellows premiered their films to a sold out audience at the 2025 BlackStar Film Festival. In September, we had a wrap dinner to celebrate the fellows’ work over the course of the last year and we held exit interviews to go over the fellowship period and how each of our fellows experienced the programming and pace of the lab program.

Seen Journal

Issues 008 & 009

Seen

Seen is our journal of film, art, and visual culture. The journal presents critical cultural discourse from Black, Brown, and Indigenous perspectives to a wider audience of tastemakers, academics, funders, critics, and film enthusiasts.

In 2025, we released Issue 008 in May 2025 and Issue 009 in October 2025. Issue 008 was guest edited by artist and filmmaker Sky Hopinka and issue 009’s cover star was Andre Holland and featured a piece with him by writer Murtada Elfadl.

Our Seen Advisory Board remains the same as last year. Our art director, Raquel Hazell, had to depart from her role after completing issue 009. We have hired the duo from Parallel Work to art direct the upcoming issue, 010, due in May 2026.

Issue 008 was celebrated with a launch event at the Institute of Contemporary Art, Philadelphia featuring a conversation between Maori Karmael Holmes and guest editor Sky Hopinka. The event welcomed visitors who engaged in a Q&A following the conversation, and a reception.

Issue 009 was celebrated with a launch event at Percy Restaurant in Philadelphia and featured a conversation between two of the writers from 009, Nicole G. Young and Bedatri D. Choudury, and editor-in-chief, Heidi Saman, followed by a Q&A. The event welcomed 71 attendees, all of whom had to purchase an issue for entrance.

William and Louise Greaves Filmmaker Seminar

The William and Louise Greaves Filmmaker Seminar is presented in collaboration with Stanford University's Institute for Diversity in the Arts and presented with the Wyncote Foundation.

The William and Louise Greaves Filmmaker Seminar is an annual, three-day gathering for Black, Brown, and Indigenous artists working in cinematic realms. The 2025 Seminar, hosted for the second time in California at Stanford University, was presented in collaboration with the university's Institute for Diversity in the Arts. The fifth edition of the seminar welcomed 127 participants for three days of programming consisting of workshops, screenings, and other enriching learning experiences. Highlights included a keynote speech by Suneil Sanzgiri titled "Kinships Beyond the Grave", a director's commentary by Zeinabu irene Davis on her film "Compensation", and an in-process presentation with filmmaker and actor Numa Perrier on her forthcoming film about Audre Lorde, "The Erotic."

“Really grateful to be in community with folks in a way that cuts through the layers that can be otherwise present in other spaces...it convenes based on a shared spirit of values, aesthetic, and impact while leaving space for our diversity of perspectives to come through.”

“So well organized, I don’t know if I’ve attended anything that was so well and smoothly run. The staff was so down to earth and friendly, and the people who attended were as well”

Accessibility & Wellness

BlackStar is committed to centering access in our internal policies, collective culture and our programmatic offerings to artists and the public. Our work at the 2025 Festival included enhanced access in the following manners:

Program Accessibility

- Designated a full-time staff member to manage accessibility
- Provided ASL interpretation at all in-person panels and Q&As
- Provided foreign language interpreters to international filmmakers by request
- Open captioned all films screened in-person
- Closed captioned all films screened virtually
- Created audio description for thirteen films to assist blind and low vision audiences
- We distributed a detailed accessibility guide in both our printed program guide and digitally on our website, allowing us to clearly communicate accessibility accommodations to the entire audience.
- Required masks at all times indoors, including during film screenings.
- We provided childcare for participating filmmakers and panelists upon request
- Provided $2 tickets for EBT and Art-Reach ACCESS cardholders.

Venue Accessibility

- All festival venues are wheelchair accessible.
- Restrooms were gender neutral
- Parent rooms (also known as lactation rooms) were available.
- A quiet space/sensory-friendly room was available to all attendees, outfitted with sensory toys and decompression activities.
- Assistive listening devices were available at all venues by request.

Wellness

At the 2025 festival our wellness coach Kimberly Hunter-Bryant led the audience in a pre- and post-screening moment of grounding for four films that have distressing themes. We also designated a wellness space this year at the Kimmel Center where Kimberly provided guided wellness sessions to festival-goers during a daily 90-minute window. We also invited back the safety team for another year, and they were incorporated more organically with the festival staff.
