BlackStar Projects, producer of the BlackStar Film Festival, is proud to announce the launch of Seen, a twice-annual journal of film and visual culture made for and about Black, Brown, Indigenous and other artists of color.

Edited by BlackStar Artistic Director and CEO Maori Karmael Holmes, Seen’s first issue includes essays, reviews, interviews, original art and photography, and more.

“As artists of color, we have always had to contend with our work being overlooked and ignored. We are practiced in finding each other, making demands of institutions, and building worlds anew,” writes Holmes in her introduction to the issue. “With Seen we are attempting to highlight why our perspectives on our art have always been and continue to be vital.”

Highlights from the issue include Heitor Augusto on queer Brazilian cinema, Niela Orr in conversation with The Forty-Year-Old Version writer/director Radha Blank, Darol Olu Kae on Sky Hopinka’s ma4ni – towards the ocean, towards the shore, Heidi Saman in conversation with Lulu Wang, a look inside renowned painter Amy Sherald’s Jersey City studio, an unproduced short script by Terence Nance, and storyboards from Blitz Bazawule’s The Burial of Kojo.

Seen will officially release both online and in print on November 20, and is now available for preorder here.

The release of Seen follows on the heels of this year’s BlackStar Film Festival, which included approximately 90 films, including 24 world premieres and representing more than 20 countries. In addition to presenting an array of live programs and panels, this year also marked the debut of BlackStar Live!, a special daily morning show featuring filmmaker interviews, astrological updates and roundtable discussions of the day’s film programming, streamed exclusively on Facebook Live. Blackstar’s film program drew more than 30,000 views, and its daily slate of free live programming totaled more than 3.5 million.

The issue’s cover features an illustration by Makeba Rainey. In addition to Holmes, the editorial staff includes Nehad Khader, Managing Editor & Essays Section Editor; Imran Siddiquee, Reviews Section Editor; Kavita Rajanna, Interviews Section Editor; Shauna Swartz, Copyeditor; and Jelsen Lee Innocent, Designer.
Seen’s Editorial Advisory Board consists of Jeff Chang, Akiba Solomon, John L. Jackson, Jr., Louis Massiah, Adam Piron, Roya Rastegar, Sally Singer, Elizabeth Méndez Berry, Tarana Burke, Greg Tate, Gina Duncan, and Zaheer Ali.
